Let's reflect on the words of the French historian and politician Tocqueville as he described administrative despotism:
"The will of man is not shattered, but softened, bent, guided; men are seldom forced by it to act, but they are constantly restrained from acting. Such a power does not destroy, but it prevents existence; it does not tyrannize, but it compresses, extinguishes, and stupefies a people till each nation is reduced to be nothing better than a flock of timid and industrious animals, of which the government is the shepherd"...1778.
